The Adventures of X & Y was a series of short film commercials promoting Z featuring X as himself and Patrick Warburton as the voice of Y. The films were directed by Barry Levinson. In addition to being on the internet, they aired on television during 2004 and one time on TBS in 2003. The premise of the films were to show X and Y as friends, and much of the humor originated from the various situations the two found themselves in (for example, Y anticipating hooking up his TV to surround sound, despite the fact that he doesn’t need it, as X casually points out). There were two films made: A Uniform Used to Mean Something... and Hindsight is 20/20, each about five minutes in length. Solve for X, Y and Z.
